work is only "boasting of their own shame."

It does appear that the Republicans of West Virginia will never cease the same of West Virginia will never cease the following. Ever since 1870, defeat after defeat has followed in regular succession, but they continue to place the same old political grannies in the responsible position of accouchers, and they in every instance bring forth a political abortion. And then they have a great penchant for pressing ex-rebels into the service, whenever one can be found who will accept service. In days of yore, we used to endeavor to frighten the people by telling them that if the Democrats got into power, they would give the Rebels prominence, but there are but two Rebels in the State of any prominence who have declared themselves Republicans, and they have been honored with the appointment to National Conventions—one four years ago who committed an egregious blunder, (a blunder is equal to a crime) and one this year, who betrayed the party he represented. When will the Republicans learn wisdom?

If we expect to gain a victory this year we must reorganize the leadership and will be appointed to the state of the search of t resented. When will the Republicans learn wisdom?

If we expect to gain a victory this year we must reorganize the leadership and dispense with played out political backs and ex-rebels for electors. Repoimer.

A Puff for Wheeling.

(Communication in Parkersburg Times.)

A Maid the gloom caused by the hard times, which seem to cover nearly the whole country, there is, fortunately, one bright, peculiar apot within the borders of West Virginia that bears more traces of "the evil days." A city like an oracis, in a desert which seems to thrive and propper amiddt the surrounding desication. In other cities, the laboring men go about seeking work without avail, and will not be comforted, because their families are suffering. In Wheeling the busy hum of the carpenters and masons, the ringing of the anvil, and the music of ten thousand wheels and the clanging of machinery indicate it as a paradise of laboring men the centre of wealth and propperity. And well may her citieses be pround of their city. While befilteraptive and prosperity. While befilteraptive and prosperity. And well may her citieses be pround of their city. While befilteraptive and prosperity and there communities, we were told that there had been but one failure in Wheeling. Instead of devoting, their sarplus means in shaving their unfortunate neighbors paper, they have in vested it in mills and workshops, thereby providing work for thousands of laboring men, and day by day adding to the material wealth and sold prosperity of the community, and consequently they have resped a rich reward. As an illustration we were informed by a gentleman who organized an all factory about twenty years ago that he put in $2,500, nearly all he had in the world. He told a frend should have not of the concern in dividends during the lime, and that he had at least as much more remaining in the concern. He further said hat he had at least as much more remaining in the concern. He further said that he had at least as much more remaining in the concern. such now in progress of erection, besides the bank building on 12th street.

During our stay there the Court of Appleals was in session. The newly appointed Judges, Green and Edmisston, were on the bench and seemed to take as active a part in the proceedings as the old members.

Judge Haymond, the President of the court, is a very able lawyer, and makes a most excellent presiding officer.

The work upon the new Capitol building is progressing very rapidly, and it will soon be done. It does great credit to the enterprise and liberality of the people of Wheeling, and we hope they may long enjoy the irnit of their labors.

Religious Drift and Discussion.

Prot. Swing is incorrigible. He will have his gentle revenue on Prof. Patton and Calvanism, in spite of the Adensoc. His ancient prosecutor uttered some mellow fraternal sentiments at general conference at Baltimore, such as that Presbyterians are "Calvinists when they preach, but Arminians another; and Prof. Swing now remarks in his paper that Prof. Patton has become "a first-class latitudinarian." "Two years in Chicago airfol free thought. If in two years' time Prof. Patton's creed has shrunk oneshalfairfol free thought, It is two years time-Prof. Patton's creed has shrunk oneshalf-from being the truth of God has declined into being only half of the divine coun-sel,—what may we not expect and hope for by the time the Arminian general cenference shall again assemble? Pear-haps "the world of Christian faith will be seen by him as divided up into small-er sections, and, instead of speaking of 'two hemispheres,' the progressive man will say that the creeds are only islands, and that his Calvinismis only a Bermuda in the wide sea." Recutring to the hemin the wide sea." Recurring to the hem-isphere simile, he deduces thus: "Cal-vinism declares that God for his mere vinism declares that God for his mere good pleasure foreordained some persons to wrath. Arminianism declares that he did nothing of the kind. These asser-tions combine in the Christian system, and the Methodists ought to be proud of their half of the combination."

Rev. Francis T. Washburn, in his new rolume, answers for himself the question whether the adapted body of the Unitarians, who cannot think Christ higher han man, who have outgrown Channing's rians, who cannot think Christ signer than man, who have outgrown Channing's phrases,—may rightly remain in that fellowship, or whether it is their duty to leave it. He says, Stay, not alone because of sentimental association, but for reasons, which he thus states: We hold that there is a substantial unity of faith between us and the Unitarian fathers. Like them, we believe in the absolute unity of God, in the headship of Jesus Christ, in the supreme value of the Bible as containing the gospel of Christ, and as as showing us its historical preparation and its first fruits. We believe, like them, in the outward church as an institution for continuing and unfolding to their universal ends the thought and life of Christ. And we believe, like them, in raligious liberty, in leaning ever toward the largest possible religious fellowship, letting any one join us who wants to join us; nay, going into the highways and by-ways, and compelling them to come in, even at the risk of getting into strange company. We stand, as our fathers did, upon the outskirts of the Christian Church in loose array, each seemingly for himself, with little apparent order or leadership, yet at our, post, an essential part of the great army.

Mr. Gladstone has an unusually interesting paper in the current Contemporary Review on the Courses of Religious

Editors Intelligencer:

I see that you have made some humorous allusions to the immense number of Hayes men who have risen to the surface. I an not one of that class and don't intend to claim to be, for although I shall vote the Hayes ticket with all my might, I should have felt much better had Blaine been nominated. I regarded the delegates to the convention from West Virginia as being instructed to vote for Blaine, and men who would disregard their instructions and then boast of their treacherous work, I deem boast of their treacherous work is only "boasting of their own shame."

It does appear that the Republicans of West Virginia will never cease their blundering. Ever since 1870, defeat after defeat has followed in regular succession, but they continue to place the same old political grannies in the responsible position of accouchers, and they in every work in the product of the part into their present the product of the part into their present the product of the part of the part into their present the part of the part into their present the part of the part
